

NEWS from the RiskShield Cosmos

Dear Tyrone,

The payments landscape continues to move fast, from instant payments and network intelligence to the growing momentum behind account-to-account transactions. For banks, PSPs, and financial institutions, this creates new opportunities, but also new expectations around speed, security, and collaboration.

In this issue of the RiskShield News Radar, we take a closer look at why fraud prevention needs a wider view, share Roy Prayikulam's perspective in a recent expert overview by The Paypers, and invite you to meet us at Money20/20 Europe in Amsterdam.

Enjoy the read.

Latest Blog Published: Why Fraud Teams Need a Wider View

Fraudsters today rarely limit themselves to one institution's perimeter. They exploit gaps between banks, PSPs, and payment networks, especially in a world where instant payments leave little time for hesitation. In our latest blog post, we explore why internal monitoring remains essential, but is no longer enough on its own. The next step is network intelligence: combining internal analytics with trusted external signals to support faster, more confident fraud decisions.

Featured in The Paypers: Roy Prayikulam on the Future of A2A Payments

Account-to-account payments are gaining traction, promising speed and convenience while still facing practical adoption hurdles. In a recent expert overview by The Paypers, INFORM's SVP Roy Prayikulam is quoted alongside other industry voices on what is driving A2A payments forward, and what may still slow them down.
