

NEWS from the RiskShield Cosmos

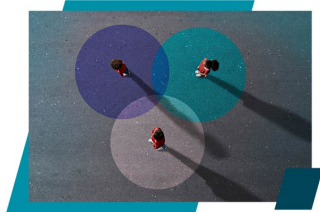

Dear Tyrone,

The pressure to process faster, safer, and smarter is only increasing. With instant payments becoming mandatory, fraud evolving in real time, and compliance teams under pressure, financial institutions across the region are navigating new demands every day.

In this issue of our RiskShield Radar, we share what's top of mind for us – and, we believe, for many of you, too.

Plus, we're excited to share a recent industry accolade that reinforces the impact we're making together with our customers. And of course, we'd love to meet you at this month's conference in Brussels.

Best regards,
Your RiskShield Team

Same Goal, Different Pressures

A fraud analyst. A compliance officer. A sanctions expert. They all get the same alert: a suspicious instant payment just triggered a rule. Now what? They all face the same instant payment pressures, but from different angles. So, how can financial institutions align these departments without creating new friction? Read our latest blog post to get insights into three different perspectives and the hurdles that each actor needs to overcome.

From Fragmented Defenses to Global Fraud Intelligence

As instant and cross-border payments grow, so does the complexity of fraud – especially when systems remain disconnected. AI can help uncover hidden patterns in real time, but true progress comes from collaboration. That's why more banks, PSPs, and regulators are moving from isolated tactics toward shared intelligence. In his latest Finextra post, our SVP Roy Prayikulam shares how smarter systems and stronger cooperation are shaping the future of global fraud prevention.

The Proof is in the Pudding

In a market under pressure from instant payments, regulation, and rising threats, it is more important than ever to ensure payment security. That's why we are especially proud to be named Category Leader by Chartis Research. But for us, this recognition is more than a ranking: it confirms that our long-term focus on real-time prevention, cross-border readiness, and regulatory alignment is meeting the mark.
